Bhuvana Hire Matha's "Apsarei of the Trial Room" is a collection of new poetry from the era, digital. A work of form, a work based on the words of Navanagari story. Bhuvana Hire Matharu has provided justice to Shivrudrappana's remark that "old words die of old age". The longing for the poems to be torn and torn becomes more and more.

Unique love, the way to see the real woman in a woman, the concern becomes very intense. In a male-dominated system, since all days are men's days, the urge to claim a day as one's own is mysterious, and the purpose of taking risks is lustful love, and the ecstasy of love can quickly ruin a whole day. Poems, when spoken by themselves, directly touch the heart of poetic sensibilities. The current poet's writing is of that nature. There is no bragging here. This poet is dear to us because there is no cleverness and delicacy of speech. Here the words are not caught in the logic and they move easily and slide into Atmadharma.

What is the staying option for trial room nymphs? Is it self-reflection? Arousal? regret
If the presentation of these questions seems tedious, is it not the fault of the audience? It presents the complex female subject in its essence without simplifying it. Here, from the woman's point of view, the value system that the authority tries to determine from that point of view, and the dilemmas of the woman whether to get out of it or not, are simultaneously evident.

This is a strange thing. What lies behind the term Mahila Sahitya See Mita Lo Kaddu is the fact that women and their personal relationships do not extend themselves beyond the family base. However, none of the institutions of civilization would have been so durable if relationships and family had not been built as female strongholds. That is, what appears limited or is said to be so, is in fact the bedrock of civil institutions, including the family. That is, a woman's belief in these things is her uniqueness and strength, not her limitations or weaknesses. Nor is it correct to say that this is the limit of experience. The right way to understand women's literature is to look at the background that when the preferences of men and women change, their experiences naturally change. While the male-female relationship is one of their many pursuits among male lay khakis, it is often the primary one among lay khakis. This trait is prominent in Bhuvana Hire Math. It is important to try to see the contemporary conditions of women in their true context. Bhuvana tries to understand the nature of the challenges faced by women in modern times, who have been facing many challenges throughout the ages. In the poem 'trial room nymphs', does the girl know herself? Do you recognize yourself in 'their' tears? How does a woman perceive herself in a trial room in a skirt above the knee, with unwaxed legs? Wax

Who should wait? For himself? For them? Looking like a model even without waxing is a reality. But the 'eyes of the world' can't accept this, May Le will surely become a nymph only in the trial room.

How to understand this? Do men never age? Why is 'Looking' a career option only for him? Well, the questions may go on and on, but who should answer them? Smart
Should a girl give to herself? Or should the world accept in retrospect the established truth as a law imposed by Uttaranchal from time immemorial? Is this challenge only for today? Isn't that all the time? What is the staying option for trial room nymphs? Autobiography? Aggressive? Are you sorry? If the presentation of these questions seems tedious, is it not the fault of the audience? This poem exposes us to many such unanswered, or seemingly unanswerable realities. This is the reason why it is a representative poem in the entire collection. It presents the complex female subject in its essence without simplifying it. Here, from the woman's point of view, the value system that tries to determine her from that point of view, and the dilemma of the woman whether to get out of it or not.
